Assumption No. 4. Technology has reached near-miraculous levels, especially in the later stories of Known Space. Hyperdrive is available in the later stories, as are transfer booths (they look like phone booths, but instead of making a call you dial in a location and teleport) and sonic stun weapons. Many human worlds in Known Space don't like weapons, so they keep only what they need for law ...

But more relevant to our interest is the decreasing attention span of the target audience. As time went by corporations would lose too many customers who wouldn't stand still for a tediously long symbolic slogan like "Winston taste good like a cigarette should" and instead started to rely upon iconic symbols which could be identified in a fraction of a second.

Let's make a mental model. Say the scale is such that one astronomical unit is equal to one millimeter (1/25th inch). There is a glowing dot for the Sun, and one millimeter away is a microscopic speck representing the Earth. The edge of the solar system is about at Pluto's orbit, which varies from 30 mm to 50 mm from the Sun (about 1 and 3/16 inch to almost 2 inches).

A portion of the cemetery of Valentia, from the Roman Republic. Last week, work took me to Valencia, a city on the east coast of Spain. Like many Spanish cities, it is built on layers of history, and luckily for the visitor, archaeologists digging under one of the city squares found a rich collection of remains from various periods.
